What is a floating solar power plant in Indonesia? This project is the first floating photovoltaic project in Indonesia and the largest in Southeast Asia, as well as being the deepest floating solar power plant under construction in the world. It is expected to play a leading role in clean energy development in Indonesia and Southeast Asia. Which country has a floating solar power plant? Situated near the equator, Indonesia is the world's largest archipelagic country with abundant solar resources, providing inherent advantages in floating photovoltaic development. The Cirata floating solar power plant has an installed capacity of 192 megawatts and is a key strategic project in Indonesia. How many solar panels can Indonesia produce a year? According to Pertamina, which cites data from the Ministry of Industry, the current domestic solar panel production capacity in Indonesia is 1.6 GW per year. "Our new factory will increase national production capacity to 3 GW so that it can later support the government's target of 300-400 GW in ," it stated, without providing further details. Why should Indonesia invest in a solar power plant? It will provide sufficient electricity for 50,000 households, significantly alleviating the power supply tension around West Java Island. In addition, the project will also help support the Indonesian government in achieving its renewable energy proportion targets as quickly as possible. Who built The Cirata Floating photovoltaic power plant in Indonesia? (Executive editor: Xie Yunxiao) The Cirata floating photovoltaic power plant project in Indonesia, built by Power Construction Corporation of China (PowerChina), was recently connected to the grid and running at full capacity. Will Indonesia's floating solar project Save a lot of coal? President Joko Widodo welcomed the project's contribution to Indonesia's emissions goals, with projected savings of 117,000 tonnes of coal annually. The success of the plant is expected to drive similar floating solar initiatives across Southeast Asia.
